Abstract

In 20th century teaching learning process was teacher centric. Traditional Face to face method was used for teaching and learning process. But the current scenario of 21st century is different. In this research paper I have gathered secondary information, regarding the need and importance of online teaching and why learners are preferring online education. The study reveals that online teaching and learning has been on the rise in recent years. Leading professors from top universities have authored thousands of highly rated online courses that are now available to both individuals and institutions. Most of the learners are giving preferences for online learning due to its peculiarities like flexibility in learning, low cost, wide geographical area and so on. Recent epidemic COVID 19 gave the realisation of the importance of online teaching and learning. Not only during epidemic but in normal conditions also online teaching and learning has many important aspects. The secondary data reveals that, online teaching is a need of time. 21st century; it's going online.

Keywords: Online teaching, traditional method, teachers, learners.

Introduction

Traditional teaching method is inherently placed on the most value on standards, curriculum and passing tests as opposed to student-focused learning. Traditional education is costly and inflexibility of time. The world is developing, different facets of knowledge is available. One cannot acquire the different aspects of knowledge of his interest by sitting in one classroom. The Online learning is showing rising trend in recent years, and it's really not hard to see why. Online teaching typically refers to courses that are delivered completely online, there are no physical or on-campus class sessions. On the one hand, eLearning courses have become hugely popular by the simple virtue of being so much more convenient than traditional face to face courses.

Over the past few years, leading professors from top universities have authored thousands of highly rated online courses that are now available to both individuals and institutions. Any college or university can use these online courses as a new type of digital, interactive
